

Transformation of the Natural Environment

Tamar Aleksidze

E-mail: Tamar. Aleksidze@tsu.ge

Department of Geography, Ivane Javakhsishvili Tbilisi State University
0179, I.Chavchavadze Ave. 3, Tbilisi, Georgia

Studying the transformation of Anthropogenic Landscape is essential for the further development of the agriculture of any regions. Anthropogenic modification of the natural environment of region has quiet a long historical roots. But fundamental transformation comes to the 20th century.

The anthropogenic impacts on the landscape are mainly caused because of the agricultural activities, forestry and urban thrift, mineral extraction, and so forth. This is why the most important part of the territories is occupied by modified or rather transformed landscapes.